

MUSIC lovers will be glad to learn that two more performances of "The Jolly Musketeer" will be given on Monday afternoon and evening. By mistake these performances were announced for last week.

"The Yankee Hero," which will be the attraction at the Salt Palace theatre for the first three nights of this week, is a beautiful story of patriotism and nobility in the island of Cuba in early days, when the Cubans were crushed with tyranny. The story is of a Cuban flower girl and of a generous Yankee, and is full of good comedy. The special features will be a ballet of beautiful girls in some new and novel work, led by a good premiere, together with specialties.

The past week at the Salt Palace was a successful one, nearly all the performances having been attended by good-sized audiences. The first two nights "Twist Love and Duty" was presented, and the remainder of the week "The Wanderer" was the bill.

John Philip Sousa has written a new march, which he has named "Imperial Edward," and which has been dedicated by special permission, to his most gracious majesty, King Edward VII. When Mr. Sousa gave a concert with his band at Sandringham, England, before the royal family on the queen's birthday, Dec. 1, King Edward took occasion to compliment the American composer on his music, and granted Sousa permission to write a march in his honor, says the Chicago Inter Ocean.

The composition was written during Sousa's recent vacation at Hot Springs, Va., and the dedication and the title of the new march was submitted to the king through the proper channels. Ten days ago a cablegram brought the royal approval, and since that time the march has been arranged for band and orchestra, has been engraved and printed in many thousand copies and distributed to the music trade. The march was rehearsed by the Sousa band under Sousa's direction, and given to the public during the band's tour in Canada.

Wilberforce Jenkins, a New York biographer extraordinary, pays his respect to Mr. De Wolf Hopper in this manner:

Basso profundo, heaviest light comedian on the stage. Is sixteen feet high and his vocal register runs from the top of his head to his heels. Born in New York, 1858, and studied singing in the round house of the New York Central railway. His voice, by careful nursing, reached such volume that at the age of 12 he was able to drown the sound of seventeen locomotives all whistling at once, and in 1875, in a contest with a tugboat for the noise championship of the United States, he put the tugboat out of commission in seven minutes. Later he entered the employ of the light house service, and for four years was usefully occupied on the New England and New Jersey coasts, warning vessels off the dangerous rocks and reefs by running the scale on foggy nights.

Attracting the attention of Colonel McCaull, of the famous opera company, by his work in this connection, the comedian was returning from Europe in a belated Canard, and while off the banks in a dense fog the bass notes of Hopper fell upon his ear. "Is that a fog horn, Captain Cook?" the impresario inquired. "No, Colonel McCaull, the distinguished navigator replied, 'that is De Wolf Hopper down at Sandy Hook.' A week later the comedian was engaged to sing male choruses in the McCaull opera company. His huge bulk soon made it necessary to promote him to leading man, since it was impossible for him to appear on the stage at all without occupying the center of it.

The statement that Mr. Hopper, as an infant, swallowed a megaphone while at play is a slander that is easily refuted by all who are aware that megaphones were not invented until long after Hopper's voice had been developed to the highest pitch. His humor is of the strenuous order known as Equine, but it is good.

There is a good story told at Sol Smith Russell's expense. It runs thus: After the performance of the new play, "Peaceful Valley," at Tacoma, an Englishman of apparent culture waited to have a word with the star. "You are," said he to Mr. Russell, "an actor of real promise. I have enjoyed your performance so highly that I venture in a spirit of admiration to venture a suggestion. I trust I am not offending?" "Oh, no, not at all," urged Mr. Russell. "Go on, my dear sir; I am only too glad to hear suggestions." "Well, then," continued the stranger, "it occurs to me that you would do well in comedy; have you ever tried to do a comic part?"

Lou Fields met Gus Rogers on "The Radio" a few days ago, according to the New York Times. After talking a few minutes, Fields said: "Gus, what's become of those patent leather shoes you wore last winter?"

"They have gone to the wall, Louis."

"Why? Wasn't the leather good?"

"Yes," said Gus, with a sigh, "but the patent expired."

During Sir Henry Irving's recent visit to New York, the distinguished actor had occasion to visit the Criterion theatre during an afternoon performance of "Du Barry." Passing the stage door, he noticed a couple of pickaninies waiting there for admittance, and his curiosity being excited, he accosted them and inquired what they might be doing there, says the New York Times.

"Please, boss," replied one of them, a coal-black urchin of about 10, "we're actors."

"Indeed," said Sir Henry, his stern features relaxing into a smile, "and what part do you play?"

The little son of Ethiopia drew himself up proudly. "Ise de footstool for Mrs. Leslie Carter," he announced, gravely; "an' Andy, he pours de coffee."

"Do you recognize the profession here?" queried Humphat, insinuatingly.

THE PLAYERS

five that ever assembled in a Pittsburgh theatre. Miss Trux was surrounded with floral offerings and was obliged to make a speech before the curtain.

Nat Goodwin and Maxine Elliott have decided not to present "The Light That Failed," and now offer the play for sale. Goodwin and Elliott will separate in September, 1902.

Eugene Canfield has been re-engaged for another season with David Warfield in "The Auctioneer."

A Cleveland man has finished a new melodrama that he thinks will be a winner from the word go, says the Cleveland Plain Dealer. He hasn't named it yet, but most any name will do, provided it shows up well on the posters, and the dramatist isn't worrying a bit about this trifling detail.

In the construction of his play he has followed the Burns method and written the last act first. This enabled him to finish at the beginning.

My drama can be played from either end," he said recently. "It not only concludes with a climax, but begins with one as well. This at times should be a very good thing for us. If business proved dull and it became necessary to take unusual pains to save the costumes from the dresser, the people of the cast could wear all their costumes at once, and then by beginning the play at the end would be enabled to utilize the outside costumes first."

While all my scenes are strong, I like the climax of the third act best. An officer comes in to catch the hero, a crime which he did not commit—an idea carefully worked over—and the hero's intelligent dog eats the warrant for his master's arrest. The officer, who is really the villain in disguise, is nearly baffled, but not quite. He snatches up the dog and hands him to the hero, declaring that in doing so he has served the warrant on him.

The hero demurs and thereupon everything that ever assembled in a Pittsburgh theatre. Miss Trux was surrounded with floral offerings and was obliged to make a speech before the curtain.

Nat Goodwin and Maxine Elliott have decided not to present "The Light That Failed," and now offer the play for sale. Goodwin and Elliott will separate in September, 1902.

Eugene Canfield has been re-engaged for another season with David Warfield in "The Auctioneer."

A Cleveland man has finished a new melodrama that he thinks will be a winner from the word go, says the Cleveland Plain Dealer. He hasn't named it yet, but most any name will do, provided it shows up well on the posters, and the dramatist isn't worrying a bit about this trifling detail.

In the construction of his play he has followed the Burns method and written the last act first. This enabled him to finish at the beginning.

My drama can be played from either end," he said recently. "It not only concludes with a climax, but begins with one as well. This at times should be a very good thing for us. If business proved dull and it became necessary to take unusual pains to save the costumes from the dresser, the people of the cast could wear all their costumes at once, and then by beginning the play at the end would be enabled to utilize the outside costumes first."

While all my scenes are strong, I like the climax of the third act best. An officer comes in to catch the hero, a crime which he did not commit—an idea carefully worked over—and the hero's intelligent dog eats the warrant for his master's arrest. The officer, who is really the villain in disguise, is nearly baffled, but not quite. He snatches up the dog and hands him to the hero, declaring that in doing so he has served the warrant on him.

The hero demurs and thereupon everything that ever assembled in a Pittsburgh theatre. Miss Trux was surrounded with floral offerings and was obliged to make a speech before the curtain.

Nat Goodwin and Maxine Elliott have decided not to present "The Light That Failed," and now offer the play for sale. Goodwin and Elliott will separate in September, 1902.

Eugene Canfield has been re-engaged for another season with David Warfield in "The Auctioneer."

A Cleveland man has finished a new melodrama that he thinks will be a winner from the word go, says the Cleveland Plain Dealer. He hasn't named it yet, but most any name will do, provided it shows up well on the posters, and the dramatist isn't worrying a bit about this trifling detail.

In the construction of his play he has followed the Burns method and written the last act first. This enabled him to finish at the beginning.

My drama can be played from either end," he said recently. "It not only concludes with a climax, but begins with one as well. This at times should be a very good thing for us. If business proved dull and it became necessary to take unusual pains to save the costumes from the dresser, the people of the cast could wear all their costumes at once, and then by beginning the play at the end would be enabled to utilize the outside costumes first."

While all my scenes are strong, I like the climax of the third act best. An officer comes in to catch the hero, a crime which he did not commit—an idea carefully worked over—and the hero's intelligent dog eats the warrant for his master's arrest. The officer, who is really the villain in disguise, is nearly baffled, but not quite. He snatches up the dog and hands him to the hero, declaring that in doing so he has served the warrant on him.

The hero demurs and thereupon everything that ever assembled in a Pittsburgh theatre. Miss Trux was surrounded with floral offerings and was obliged to make a speech before the curtain.

Nat Goodwin and Maxine Elliott have decided not to present "The Light That Failed," and now offer the play for sale. Goodwin and Elliott will separate in September, 1902.

Eugene Canfield has been re-engaged for another season with David Warfield in "The Auctioneer."

A Cleveland man has finished a new melodrama that he thinks will be a winner from the word go, says the Cleveland Plain Dealer. He hasn't named it yet, but most any name will do, provided it shows up well on the posters, and the dramatist isn't worrying a bit about this trifling detail.

In the construction of his play he has followed the Burns method and written the last act first. This enabled him to finish at the beginning.

My drama can be played from either end," he said recently. "It not only concludes with a climax, but begins with one as well. This at times should be a very good thing for us. If business proved dull and it became necessary to take unusual pains to save the costumes from the dresser, the people of the cast could wear all their costumes at once, and then by beginning the play at the end would be enabled to utilize the outside costumes first."

While all my scenes are strong, I like the climax of the third act best. An officer comes in to catch the hero, a crime which he did not commit—an idea carefully worked over—and the hero's intelligent dog eats the warrant for his master's arrest. The officer, who is really the villain in disguise, is nearly baffled, but not quite. He snatches up the dog and hands him to the hero, declaring that in doing so he has served the warrant on him.

The hero demurs and thereupon everything that ever assembled in a Pittsburgh theatre. Miss Trux was surrounded with floral offerings and was obliged to make a speech before the curtain.

Nat Goodwin and Maxine Elliott have decided not to present "The Light That Failed," and now offer the play for sale. Goodwin and Elliott will separate in September, 1902.

Eugene Canfield has been re-engaged for another season with David Warfield in "The Auctioneer."

husband, has now essayed the more pretentious role of "Four-Fours." Milton Lackaye appears as one of her supporters.

Kirland Calhoun, manager for a number of years of the Calhoun-Opera company, died on Monday last, of heart disease.

It is announced that the actual tragedy in which Joseph Mansfield, Jim Plisk and Edward Stokes played parts, is to form the foundation for a melodrama. This will be stage realism with a vengeance.

A Florida doctor has established a bad precedent. A song writer mentioned the doctor in one of his ditties, and the grating physician, made the balladist a present of a lot of land.

UNIMAGINATIVE MULES.

This Fact One of the Reasons of Their Value.

(New Orleans Times-Democrat.)

"Mules are utterly without any sort of imagination," said an old veterinary surgeon, "and this fact alone has placed humanity under an immense obligation to this creature. Many accidents have been prevented, many lives have been saved because of the fact that the mule does not know this extraordinary thing we call imagination. The imaginative faculty is not unknown in certain other lower orders of life. Dogs frequently show evidence of imagination. They hear imaginary sounds because of some peculiar association. Dogs have been known to bristle up at shadows or at certain natural formations which suggested the idea of immediate attack.

"Every owner of a dog is familiar with the dog's dreaming habit. Horses, too, imagine things and dream a great deal. They have that more delicate and more sensitive temperament which develops the imagination, and the faculty for dreaming. But the mule never imagines anything. He never dreams. He believes simply in what he can see, feel, smell, hear and taste. When the possibility of these senses are exhausted he is at the end of his row, as far as his mind goes. He rarely shows nervousness, and even at trying moments, at critical times he simply deals with the situation with stoical indifference, making no effort to go beyond the range of the five senses. This fact has made him a safe member. For instance, men who are in the habit of riding through dan-than possible, for these small coins are troublesome things to handle by the hundreds of thousands.

Supposing that you are riding down town on a Cattle Grover, and you hand the conductor a $2 bill. Unless he is shy of nickels he will return a handful of them, and if you protest he says:

"Sorry, but I can't help it. You ought to get some small change before you jump on a car." Then if he is in a communicative mood he will add: "You see, the 'big guns' at the general offices don't like to get any more nickels than they have to. I don't mean that they hate to get money. Not by a jugful. But they are deluged with 5-cent pieces every day, and we have standing orders to turn in as few of them as possible.

"Therefore if a cheerful patron comes at us with a bill—and we don't like to get big bills, by the way—we immediately counter with a batch of nickels. Kick? Why, of course, some of them do, but it's coin of the realm and they have to take it."

The average daily receipts of the Union Traction company amount to $5,000 in bills, $12,500 in silver and almost $2,000 in nickels.

This means that one traction company handles about 35,000 nickels alone each day. What becomes of these small coins after they have been handed to the conductor?

As soon as the faretaker finishes his day's "run," he turns his receipts over to an official at the general offices. This official has his assistants place the nickels in bags and take them to a bank.

Several of the big downtown banks are the first depositories of the nickel after it has passed through the treasures of the traction companies. Time was when these nickels were actually counted in the banks. This was in the days when the approach of a street car was heralded to waiting passengers by melting pot with hundreds of thousands of nickels that on "6000" any more, while the still serviceable coin gets gradually into circulation again, added subsequently by the bright new fellows that leave the mint for another tour among humanity, making dividends, building homes and creating joy or sorrow, as the case may be.

Material in the nickel means transportation over stated line for a certain distance. To the holder of stock in surface and elevated lines, taking good, bad and indifferent lines together, the nickel means, on an average:

Operating expenses 1,950 pennies
Material 145 pennies
Taxes and insurance 255 pennies
Interest on bonds 1,440 pennies
Dividends 300 pennies

Totals 3,990 pennies

During the past year Chicago surface and elevated roads transported 358,547,534 passengers. This number includes those who ride on "casses," but it is safe to say that 350,000,000 people paid their fares, which means $17,500,000 in nickels.

The receipts of the Chicago Union Traction company from passengers last year amounted to $7,269,316, representing an average of $19.917.0 for every day in the year. This means a total of 145,363,320 fares, or a daily average of 402,837. Of course, the Union Traction company has the most extensive service of all transportation lines, last year's figures of the number of passengers carried being:

Chicago Union Traction company 145,363,320
Chicago City Railway company 117,862,990
Metropolitan L road 33,910,790
South Side L road 26,230,189
Northwestern L road 20,327,000
Lake Street L road 15,729,240

Total 359,547,534

body comes on, including the father of the girl the hero loves, a leading corporation lawyer, and to him the hero appeals for a decision in the matter. The eminent counsel considers the question gravely, while everybody hangs around waiting for the opinion. Just as he is going to decide in favor of the villain, the dog suddenly coughs up the seal of the warrant he had swallowed, and the lawyer quickly decides that the document without the seal is worthless. This releases the hero amid tremendous applause, and the villain sneaks away muttering "Tolled."

All I'm afraid of," the dramatist concluded, "is that just after I get this play going and pulling in its thousands, some blamed Chicagoan will hustle forward and insist that he wrote the piece twenty years ago."

Sir Henry Irving relates a western experience that happened to him during one of his earlier tours in this country, says the New York Times. "I was playing 'Othello' in the then Washington territory, and my audience was composed for the most part of miners. When we came to the handkerchief scene, where Othello demands the handkerchief of Desdemona, many times I noticed that the audience was becoming exceedingly nervous. About the third time the demand for the handkerchief was repeated a large Irishman in the rear of the house shouted:

"Wipe your nose on your sleeve, you nagger, and let the play go on."

Wilton Lackaye is a rhymester as well as an actor. Here is one verse of his latest poem, entitled "A Lullaby," according to the New York Commercial Advertiser:

Little Ike, go to sleep,
While my dear mother keeps—
Ma would like to keep a few
If der tickets wasn't due.
Vile you slumber in your nest
Fa don't no interest.
Fa low,
Sell high,
Key!

Mabelle Rice, daughter of Dan Rice, the veteran clown, is contemplating going into vaudeville. She is said to be a clever violinist and a singer of unusual ability.

It is reported that Julia Marlowe's personal share of receipts of Bolger & Co.'s season's performance of "When Knickerbock was in Flower" is close on to $15,000. After her return from Europe she will produce "Cattile Mendes" play, "Queen Florentina," opening in October.

Grace George (Mrs. W. A. Brady), who has been appearing in "Under Southern Skies," under the management of her husband, has now essayed the more pretentious role of "Four-Fours." Milton Lackaye appears as one of her supporters.

Kirland Calhoun, manager for a number of years of the Calhoun-Opera company, died on Monday last, of heart disease.

It is announced that the actual tragedy in which Joseph Mansfield, Jim Plisk and Edward Stokes played parts, is to form the foundation for a melodrama. This will be stage realism with a vengeance.

A Florida doctor has established a bad precedent. A song writer mentioned the doctor in one of his ditties, and the grating physician, made the balladist a present of a lot of land.

UNIMAGINATIVE MULES.

This Fact One of the Reasons of Their Value.

(New Orleans Times-Democrat.)

"Mules are utterly without any sort of imagination," said an old veterinary surgeon, "and this fact alone has placed humanity under an immense obligation to this creature. Many accidents have been prevented, many lives have been saved because of the fact that the mule does not know this extraordinary thing we call imagination. The imaginative faculty is not unknown in certain other lower orders of life. Dogs frequently show evidence of imagination. They hear imaginary sounds because of some peculiar association. Dogs have been known to bristle up at shadows or at certain natural formations which suggested the idea of immediate attack.

"Every owner of a dog is familiar with the dog's dreaming habit. Horses, too, imagine things and dream a great deal. They have that more delicate and more sensitive temperament which develops the imagination, and the faculty for dreaming. But the mule never imagines anything. He never dreams. He believes simply in what he can see, feel, smell, hear and taste. When the possibility of these senses are exhausted he is at the end of his row, as far as his mind goes. He rarely shows nervousness, and even at trying moments, at critical times he simply deals with the situation with stoical indifference, making no effort to go beyond the range of the five senses. This fact has made him a safe member. For instance, men who are in the habit of riding through dan-than possible, for these small coins are troublesome things to handle by the hundreds of thousands.

Supposing that you are riding down town on a Cattle Grover, and you hand the conductor a $2 bill. Unless he is shy of nickels he will return a handful of them, and if you protest he says:

"Sorry, but I can't help it. You ought to get some small change before you jump on a car." Then if he is in a communicative mood he will add: "You see, the 'big guns' at the general offices don't like to get any more nickels than they have to. I don't mean that they hate to get money. Not by a jugful. But they are deluged with 5-cent pieces every day, and we have standing orders to turn in as few of them as possible.

"Therefore if a cheerful patron comes at us with a bill—and we don't like to get big bills, by the way—we immediately counter with a batch of nickels. Kick? Why, of course, some of them do, but it's coin of the realm and they have to take it."

The average daily receipts of the Union Traction company amount to $5,000 in bills, $12,500 in silver and almost $2,000 in nickels.

This means that one traction company handles about 35,000 nickels alone each day. What becomes of these small coins after they have been handed to the conductor?

As soon as the faretaker finishes his day's "run," he turns his receipts over to an official at the general offices. This official has his assistants place the nickels in bags and take them to a bank.

Several of the big downtown banks are the first depositories of the nickel after it has passed through the treasures of the traction companies. Time was when these nickels were actually counted in the banks. This was in the days when the approach of a street car was heralded to waiting passengers by melting pot with hundreds of thousands of nickels that on "6000" any more, while the still serviceable coin gets gradually into circulation again, added subsequently by the bright new fellows that leave the mint for another tour among humanity, making dividends, building homes and creating joy or sorrow, as the case may be.

Material in the nickel means transportation over stated line for a certain distance. To the holder of stock in surface and elevated lines, taking good, bad and indifferent lines together, the nickel means, on an average:

Operating expenses 1,950 pennies
Material 145 pennies
Taxes and insurance 255 pennies
Interest on bonds 1,440 pennies
Dividends 300 pennies

Totals 3,990 pennies

During the past year Chicago surface and elevated roads transported 358,547,534 passengers. This number includes those who ride on "casses," but it is safe to say that 350,000,000 people paid their fares, which means $17,500,000 in nickels.

The receipts of the Chicago Union Traction company from passengers last year amounted to $7,269,316, representing an average of $19.917.0 for every day in the year. This means a total of 145,363,320 fares, or a daily average of 402,837. Of course, the Union Traction company has the most extensive service of all transportation lines, last year's figures of the number of passengers carried being:

Chicago Union Traction company 145,363,320
Chicago City Railway company 117,862,990
Metropolitan L road 33,910,790
South Side L road 26,230,189
Northwestern L road 20,327,000
Lake Street L road 15,729,240

Total 359,547,534

body comes on, including the father of the girl the hero loves, a leading corporation lawyer, and to him the hero appeals for a decision in the matter. The eminent counsel considers the question gravely, while everybody hangs around waiting for the opinion. Just as he is going to decide in favor of the villain, the dog suddenly coughs up the seal of the warrant he had swallowed, and the lawyer quickly decides that the document without the seal is worthless. This releases the hero amid tremendous applause, and the villain sneaks away muttering "Tolled."

All I'm afraid of," the dramatist concluded, "is that just after I get this play going and pulling in its thousands, some blamed Chicagoan will hustle forward and insist that he wrote the piece twenty years ago."

Sir Henry Irving relates a western experience that happened to him during one of his earlier tours in this country, says the New York Times. "I was playing 'Othello' in the then Washington territory, and my audience was composed for the most part of miners. When we came to the handkerchief scene, where Othello demands the handkerchief of Desdemona, many times I noticed that the audience was becoming exceedingly nervous. About the third time the demand for the handkerchief was repeated a large Irishman in the rear of the house shouted:

"Wipe your nose on your sleeve, you nagger, and let the play go on."

Wilton Lackaye is a rhymester as well as an actor. Here is one verse of his latest poem, entitled "A Lullaby," according to the New York Commercial Advertiser:

Little Ike, go to sleep,
While my dear mother keeps—
Ma would like to keep a few
If der tickets wasn't due.
Vile you slumber in your nest
Fa don't no interest.
Fa low,
Sell high,
Key!

Mabelle Rice, daughter of Dan Rice, the veteran clown, is contemplating going into vaudeville. She is said to be a clever violinist and a singer of unusual ability.

It is reported that Julia Marlowe's personal share of receipts of Bolger & Co.'s season's performance of "When Knickerbock was in Flower" is close on to $15,000. After her return from Europe she will produce "Cattile Mendes" play, "Queen Florentina," opening in October.

Grace George (Mrs. W. A. Brady), who has been appearing in "Under Southern Skies," under the management of her

The Street Car Nickel.

The Conductor Does Not Get Them All; Some Go to the Company.

(Chicago Inter Ocean.)

"F ARE, please!" The conductor crowded his way through the "rings it up" on the register. This is the extent of the ordinary street car patron's acquaintance with the financial workings of a traction company.

If he is an old and wise patron he never hands the conductor anything more than a 5, 10, or 25-cent piece. When coining of a larger denomination or bills are tendered the uniformed autocrat of the car returns a handful of nickels. He doesn't do it through spite. He is simply carrying out one of the policies of his employers. This policy is to avoid receiving any more nickels the merry tinkle of a bell attached to the jaded "leader" of the horse or mule team. Since then the nickels have increased in numbers to such an extent that actual count is out of the question, and they are simply weighed.

Of course, old and worn nickels are lighter than the new coin, but the banks and the traction companies have arrived at an average to the number of nickels in the pound, fair to both parties. The banks, perhaps, are the gainers by this method of computation. At any rate, they gain much valuable time by it, and time is money.

After a short rest in the bank the coins are taken to the sub-treasury where they are placed on trial as to their fitness for further circulation. The worn coin is condemned to the than possible, for these small coins are troublesome things to handle by the hundreds of thousands.

Supposing that you are riding down town on a Cattle Grover, and you hand the conductor a $2 bill. Unless he is shy of nickels he will return a handful of them, and if you protest he says:

"Sorry, but I can't help it. You ought to get some small change before you jump on a car." Then if he is in a communicative mood he will add: "You see, the 'big guns' at the general offices don't like to get any more nickels than they have to. I don't mean that they hate to get money. Not by a jugful. But they are deluged with 5-cent pieces every day, and we have standing orders to turn in as few of them as possible.

"Therefore if a cheerful patron comes at us with a bill—and we don't like to get big bills, by the way—we immediately counter with a batch of nickels. Kick? Why, of course, some of them do, but it's coin of the realm and they have to take it."

The average daily receipts of the Union Traction company amount to $5,000 in bills, $12,500 in silver and almost $2,000 in nickels.

This means that one traction company handles about 35,000 nickels alone each day. What becomes of these small coins after they have been handed to the conductor?